Musée d'Orsay, Paris; Gift of Sam Salz

"I started painting because I wanted to and wanted to know if I could paint. I don't have anything in particular that I wanted to paint at that moment, but I love that anecdote about Manet and his collector and a bunch of asparagus, and it goes like this:

One day, Charles Ephrussi, a scion of a prominent Jewish banker family in fin-de-siècle Paris, commissioned a still life of a bunch of asparagus from Edouard Manet. He sent the sum of 1000 francs for the painting, then Manet said 'But Monsieur Ephrussi, that said painting only costs 800 francs! Let me send back the change!' For Edouard is a proud man, and he surely can paint the hell out of those vegetables. But Monsieur Ephrussi, himself also a proud man, and an immensely wealthy one, said 'Nononon, don't return the money, it's ok!!! I'm ok! Thank you dearest Edouard. P.S. Those asperges of yours are très mignon, most delighted to own them!' Edouard did not know what to do, so he does what he does best. A week later, a small package arrived at M. Ephrussi's mansion at No. 11 Avenue d'Iéna with a note, 'There was one missing from your bunch.'

So I start painting asparagus, green ones, because those are the only ones I know from childhood, for we don't have white ones in Thailand. I paint them, one by one, over and over again."
